

A PINK LUNCHEON

BY CORNELIA C. BEDFORD.

At this season of the year flowers can be procured in sufficient abundance to carry out the color scheme. Instead of massing them in one large group for the table arrange loosely in two or more low bowls; one of these may be in the center, the others at the ends or corners. If menu cards are used have them represent a single petal of the rose or other flower employed for decoration.

The menu itself aids in carrying out the scheme of color, the pink tint appearing in almost every course. A majority of the dishes selected are familiar to our readers. In the third course the cream sauce for fish cutlets may be tinted by the use of paprika instead of white pepper or cayenne.

Oysters a la Mignonette.
Cream of Carrot Soup.
Fish-Cutlets.
Steamed Potato Balls.
Sweetbread Timbales.
Broiled Chicken.
French Fried Potatoes.
Sauté Lobster Salad.
Cheese Straws.
Frozen Strawberries.
Jellied Rose Leaves.
Fancy Cakes.
Coffee.

Mignonette pepper is white pepper very coarsely crushed. To a half teaspoonful add the same quantity of salt, a teaspoonful of chopped chives, a tablespoonful of chopped mild onion, six tablespoonfuls of tarragon vinegar and two teaspoonfuls of lime juice. Divide this into six portions and stand a tiny cup holding it in the center of each plate of raw oysters.

Use only the red part of raw carrots, grating off enough to make a cupful. Simmer in a cupful of water half an hour, then strain and add to a quart of milk, thickening it with one heaping tablespoonful of butter rubbed to a paste with two heaping tablespoonfuls of flour and seasoning with salt, pepper and a few drops of onion juice. With this serve tiny dice of fried bread.

Fish cutlets require a pound and a half of any firm white fish steamed until cooked, then flaked and mixed with one-half its measure of thick white sauce and two beaten egg yolks. Season highly, chill, mold in small cutlet shapes, egg and crumb them and fry in deep smoking hot fat. The potatoes are cut raw into small balls, steamed until barely tender and served with a little melted butter and a sprinkling of chopped parsley.

Two pairs of sweetbreads are, after soaking in cold water, simmered for half an hour in salted water with a half onion sliced and one clove. Drain them, drop into cold water until chilled, then wipe. From one cut thin slices and these into narrow strips. Arrange round the sides of six buttered timbale-molds. Trim the rest of the sweetbreads free from fat and chop very fine with a silver knife. Stir into a hot sauce made with a tablespoonful each of butter and flour, a cupful of milk and salt and pepper. Set aside until cooled, add five beaten egg yolks, mix well and carefully fill the molds. These are to be steamed in a pan of hot water in the oven until firm in the center—a scant half hour. The sauce is a white one, to which is added one-sixth as much thick tomato sauce, and a few finely chopped mushrooms.

The salad is a novelty of the season. Dice enough boiled lobster meat to make a pint. Have ready a cupful of strong aspic jelly which is cold and thick, but not quite jellied; add a half-cupful of thick tomato sauce containing a teaspoonful of gelatine, also four tablespoonfuls of mayonnaise. When beginning to jelly whisk with an egg beater until the mixture is light and frothy. Add carefully the lobster meat and one tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley. Turn into small molds which have been rinsed in cold water and chilled on ice. Stand on ice until set. Turn out on individual plates on blanched lettuce leaves. Sprinkle with dried lobster coral and serve mayonnaise separately.

The jellied rose leaves require much care in preparation. Make a quart of very clear lemon or wine jelly. Pull carefully to pieces a number of pink roses. Stand a rinsed mold in a pan of cracked ice. Pour a half-inch of jelly in the bottom; when partly set carefully insert upright in the thickening jelly a number of the petals, remembering that their positions will be reversed when served. When the layer is quite firm add a second and so continue until the materials are used. This jelly must not be made until the morning of the day it is used to guard against change in the color of the petals.

Hull and rinse two quarts of strawberries, mash and rub through a sieve. Make a syrup with one pint of sugar and three cupfuls of water, boil five minutes and chill. Add to the pulped fruit the juice of one lemon and freeze.
